What are cookies?

Cookies are data files that are stored on your computer's hard drive and keep records of your visit to a website. They allow Peabody to recognise you and tailor your visit to suit your individual preferences. You may be able to configure your web browser to prevent the use of cookies but this will mean that some website functions or services may not be available.

What do cookies do?

We're constantly improving our website based on what our visitors do and the pages you look at. Our cookies record anonymous information about visits and clicks on each web page. We use this to identify things that are going well, and things that we can improve.

These cookies are not used for the placement of advertising, but are used so that our web servers can deliver the correct web pages to the correct person.

Log information

When you visit our websites, Peabody collects certain information (the same information that most websites log when they are accessed). This information (contained in the "header" of your request to access a Peabody web page) usually includes the browser type you used, your Internet Protocol (IP) address, and the date and time of day.

Peabody needs this information to help us provide our services to you. For example, Peabody would need to validate your identity to maintain the security of your account.

Peabody also needs to know what Internet Protocol address your query came from so Peabody can send the appropriate pages back to you. In addition, Peabody logs this information for internal review purposes.

The log information is also important for security, audit, quality improvement and other internal processes.

Updating your information

You can change your personal information at any time, by accessing your account. You can terminate your account at any time by requesting this from our web team.

Peabody typically deactivates accounts within five business days of such requests. You should be aware, however, that residual copies of information may remain stored on Peabody's systems even after the deletion of information or the termination of your account.

We hope you will enjoy using our websites.
